After examining the claims of homeopathy, the House of Commons select committee on science and technology has concluded that the NHS should no longer provide funding for the treatment.

Homeopathy - a 200-year-old complementary medical practice - uses heavily diluted substances which are thought to cause similar symptoms to the illnesses they are being used to treat; thus triggering the body's natural healing process.

Millions of patients across the globe swear by homeopathic treatments while others dismiss it as nothing more than a 'placebo'.

Whichever side of the debate you're on, life insurance comparison website - QuoteBoffin.co.uk - believes that every patient should have the right to seek medical care they feel is appropriate for them.

A spokesperson for QuoteBoffin.co.uk said: "Freedom of choice is something that Britain prides itself on. Removing homeopathy from the NHS medical roster means a percentage of patients are being denied the right to choose a method of treatment they believe is most appropriate or may work better for them than other forms of medicine.

With health insurance providers still offering homoeopathy treatments via carefully selected homeopathic specialists, patients wishing to pursue this line of treatment may have no other option but to seek private health cover."

Complimentary therapies and medicines are available via some of the UK's biggest health insurance providers such as AXA PPP and BUPA.

Patients needn't worry about paying through the nose for homeopathic treatment out with the NHS claims QuoteBoffin.co.uk: "The end of homoeopathy on the NHS doesn't mean the end of homoeopathy full stop. Health insurance premiums start from as little as £5 per month which is a small price to pay for peace of mind and first class healthcare which covers homeopathy and beyond.

With the rise and rise of price comparison websites that allow consumers to check insurance prices, there's no reason why you can't get a good deal on an insurance package that allows you to retain freedom of choice with regard to medical care."
