CONNECTICUT- For years, one drug rehab facility has consistently been on the cutting edge of drug rehab research, setting the standards for all other drug rehabs to follow.

While it's no longer a secret that alternative therapies used in conjunction with traditional drug addiction treatment therapies yield a higher success rate, Mountainside Drug Rehab and Alcohol Treatment Center has always combined Mind, Body, Spirit therapies with traditional drug rehab models creating a program that is holistic in nature. But, now Mountainside has taken holistic drug rehab to an entirely new level with its innovative Integrated Care Model™, paving the way for an entirely new approach to drug addiction treatment.

"Our holistic drug rehab program was highly effective in treating various drug and alcohol addictions," began a spokesperson for Mountainside. "We've taken it to a completely new level with our Integrated Care Model™. For the first time in the history of drug rehab, we are able to separate the case management from the treatment of an individual. Typically, when an individual enters a drug rehab program, they are prescribed the same treatment plan as the person who entered the day or even hour before them. Normally, everyone is given the same type of therapy, the same inpatient services, the same outpatient services.. Our approach is simplistic in nature: we are treating individuals and, thus, we must have a measure of care that addresses each person as an individual, giving him or her what she needs and omitting the elements that would not provide optimum results in regard to long-term sobriety success. We've developed and perfected this model over the past 12 years and we've been able to finally put a name on it and brand it as our own. The success of this treatment method is already being felt throughout drug rehabs worldwide, and we know that we've elevated the standard of care for all patients."

For more than 12 years, Mountainside Drug Rehab and Alcohol Treatment Center has led the way in offering an individualized alcohol and drug addiction treatment program. Mountainside's licensed and certified counselors, social workers and accredited treatment team provide quality, compassionate care to each individual in a tranquil, peaceful environment conducive to optimal recovery. Their program won national attention and resulted in Mountainside being invited to Washington to meet with the White House Drug Czar, John P. Walters, who wanted to learn more about the innovative program offered at Mountainside.

In addition to its licensed and certified counselors and social workers, Mountainside provides medical services through an on-staff Nurse Practitioner and Registered Nurse with specializations in drug addiction and alcohol treatment. Psychiatric services are available when needed.
