NEW YORK- Last week in Las Vegas at the Holistic Treatment 2010 Conference, a new, groundbreaking model for holistic drug rehab was unveiled by Mountainside Drug Rehab and Alcohol Treatment Center in Canaan, CT.

Long regarded as pioneers in addiction treatment, Mountainside's newest treatment model, coined Integrated Care Model™, is looking to, once again, raise the bar for all drug rehab treatment.

"We've always believed that a comprehensive approach to treatment is the best course of action for providing the best opportunity for achieving sustained sobriety," stated a spokesperson for Mountainside. "With our new Integrated Care Model™ we are truly able to separate the case management from the individual treatment plan. With our new holistic drug rehab model, our highly-specialized team of licensed, credentialed professionals evaluate an individual upon admission in each of their respective areas of specialty. The team then works together to formulate a highly-individualized treatment plan that addresses the actual needs of the individual. Whether the client needs family wellness support, physical symptom management or even community resources upon completing treatment, their treatment plan addresses those needs. We believe that this new model will soon become the standard of care for all drug rehabs, worldwide.”

Mountainside's Integrated Care Model™ is a result of more than 12 years of evidence-based experience and data and is comprehensive in its scope. It's comprised of various treatment modalities, designed to give optimum recovery and sobriety success for each of its clients. While the modalities are separate, they remain intricately connected. Such comprehensive treatment approaches offer a greater chance of success for individuals.

For more than 12 years, Mountainside Drug Rehab and Alcohol Treatment Center has led the way in offering individualized alcohol and drug addiction treatment programs. Mountainside's licensed and certified counselors, social workers and accredited treatment team provide quality, compassionate care to each individual in a tranquil, peaceful environment conducive to optimal recovery. Their program won national attention and resulted in Mountainside being invited to Washington to meet with the White House Drug Czar, John P. Walters, who wanted to learn more about the innovative program offered at Mountainside.

In addition to its licensed and certified counselors and social workers, Mountainside provides medical services through an on-staff Nurse Practitioner and Registered Nurse with specializations in drug addiction and alcohol treatment. Psychiatric services are available when needed.
